In fact, it's been called the "biggest PR problem of all time" by Birnbaum himself. He told the Wall Street Journal that he is bewildered that Coca-Cola wants to give his opinion on Israel's recent banning of the company's home appliances. The CEO seems to know exactly what Coca-Cola wants to hear. "Coke wants an outside view – the fight is not over. The company wants a second opinion from someone who isn't part of the internal workings of the company." SodaStream, for their part, is very happy to provide advice on their product, and is not part of Coca-Cola, regardless of their link to the company. Daniel Birnbaum told the WSJ that both parties should apologize for the "manipulated" way in which the issue is being handled. "It is very unfortunate that Coke chose to take advantage of this scenario by sending the letter to my counsel and attorney in an attempt to get a second opinion," Birnbaum said. "As an Israeli company, SodaStream does not have any ties to Coca-Cola."Tag: conference The past two years I have attended the SCAFS Conference with the goal of motivating others to dream of a generation that will rise up and be a shift from our current way. Joe, As I stated last week we would be glad to trade on our side. You can mark all gas (with no split) on the Northwest/Stack# 2 leg. That leg will also show no swing and no $. From there it is going to show the same cost no matter what because this deal was created prior to 1/31/2001. Just let me know what you need. We have not used any points in the last 6 months. Also please let me know if you need anything else so we can research a little more. Thanks! Please email me back so I can get a contract from you. We want to get this over with.
